When it comes to communication, behaviours and feedback, leaders are often left to work it all out for themselves. If you work in an environment with Neurodivergent individuals there can be team challenges that contribute to difficult relationships, and an un-harmonious working environment. How can anyone get an inside scoop on how to integrate differently-brained individuals when the individuals themselves often cannot describe or explain what they need or feel?

Sam Warner has ADHD and is Autistic. She is a born storyteller, and TEDxSpeaker and uses her own self-awareness to unravel the mysteries of the neuro-diverse mind and helps to bridge that communication gap with knowledge and wisdom.

Sam has been helping other professionals to communicate since 2008. Sam coaches and mentors by applying her BA (Hons) in Business Management, and sharing her considerable knowledge of neurodiversity. Sam draws on her 25+ years experience working for various large organisations in different roles such as Project Manager, Risk & Governance Manager and Strategic Operations Manager. She often appears on local radio as the resident expert in neurodiversity matters.

"Book Sam! She is enthusiastic and fun, smart and knowledgeable, professional and heart-warming. Very experienced and can deal with any crisis; including the audience!"

Benefits for the audience

- Understanding how to live and work with neurodivergent (differently brained) or neurotypical ("normal") adults. Learning about coping mechanisms, limitations and tolerance. Creating harmony in the team. Reducing grievances and attrition, saving recruitment costs and enjoying diversity of thought.
- Obtaining an insight into the different sensory issues that many neurodivergent adults have, but find hard to articulate, and finding out how that can be easily relieved, to provide a happier work environment.
- Showing, through examples, how one might use social stories to carry important, technical, complicated or difficult messages to an audience. It's so rewarding to be understood easily.
- Being able to give and receive feedback as a gift when delivered correctly and respectfully with specific examples and clear explanations.

Area of Expertise:

Neurodivergent Adults
and
Human Communication

Testimonials - What others are saying

"I love your energy and exuberance, it's not dull watching you present. It would be so easy to be just completely factual like you were doing some sort of science lecture, but you made it fun for everyone, made it interactive, which means the learning will stick and I really love that."

"It seems incredible to me that in just a short space of time you have transformed our team into a cohesive unit that works really well together. No more conflict, much reduced stress. Thank you "

"Very authentic, vulnerable and powerful speaker! Amongst an ocean of speakers there is this gem, Sam with her incredible depth and strength! It's a pleasure to listen to Sam and to learn from her in the most effortless way! She was amazing at our event recently and I highly recommend her!" Olga Geidane

"Sam is really amazing at helping Individuals and Organisations understand how to use the incredible talents of those with autism, particularly in the IT sector. She is a very relevant and enthusiastic speaker who will engage your audiences and provide huge value to your organisation." Yvonne Emery
